Dear SEC.

I am firmly oppose to the Rule 151A
Suggesting that Indexed Annuities, be Sold only by Registered Representatives of Sec. Licensed Broker-dealer.

I am a Licensed Life Insurance Agent
Selling life ins., and Annuities (Indexed)
I have Many Clients owning Life & Annuities, which is an important thing for Families.

I firmly believe that a good life insurance program ^{should} be in effect, that May or May Not include Annuities. Over the years I have ^{Seen} ~~seen~~ a good idea turn into something else.
In the past a good honest Securities Agent would insist that his prospect ~~have~~ have the ins in place. I have been in the bus-for the last 46 yrs plus ^{40's} I've seen Many Changes in our business over those 46 yrs. This change, being suggested is not good.

Securities have their place, and insurance &
Annuities have their place. Ins. Agents are trained & ~~regulated~~ Regulated.

Sincerely

Kenneth C. Hanson, P.O. Box 476, DeWitt, NY

A family believe that the only Reason the Securities folks want ~~control~~ of the indexed Annuity, is Monetary gain, as there are Millions of these types of Annuities are being Sold & the Securities Boys are feeling the effects, of a better product.

These Annuities when a person needs some guarantees, especially the folks Approaching Retirement, and the sale or placement of these Life products, be left with the Agent (Licensed & well Trained) Life Agents.

This idea is sort of like the Automobile Ind.
acquire & take over the Air Line Ind., on the Railroad, etc, Rail Road.
